AMIGA TRAINING VIDEOS

Although I have been selling the Amiga 500 since 1987, to both the general public and schools, it is only now I have come across this easy way to learn about the Amiga 500 and the Workbench. As the Commodore Education Key Dealer for the Wellington Area, I have been involved with many school instalations, and know the amount of time required in learning to become conversant with the Amiga 500.

In association with B. & I. Electronics of Wellington, we have obtained the distribution rights to two training videos, produced by Home Study Videos, for the Amiga 500. Both videos are of approximately 50 minutes, and are broken into 7 minute training sessions, which allows you to try out the lessons as you go.

The Two Videos are:- "Using Your Amiga 500" and "Using Your Amiga Workbench". Both videos have been approved by Commodore.

A break down of the Topics covered in each Video is:-

"Using Your Amiga 500"
* The Computer
* Disk Information and Care
* The Operating System
* Menu Options
* Preferences

"Using Your Amiga Workbench"
* Utilities Drawer
* System Drawer
* Expansion Drawer
* Empty Drawer
* The Extras Disk
* Explanation of Shell

I am sure you will find both videos informative and very beneficial to you, and your family, in using the Amiga, in the future.

The Cost. Each video is $ 27.50 (including GST).

Please forward your order and cheque to the above address. A handling charge of $ 4.00 should be added if only one video is required.

Regards

John

MEDIA RELEASE

New Entry Level Amiga

A new entry level Amiga from Commodore, the A600 - which is set for Australia launch at July's World of Commodore/Amiga Show at Darling Harbour, Sydney - features a range of technical enhancements which will place it well as a "starter" pack in the consumer marketplace.

The A600 makes extensive use of surface mount technology, which provides a small PCB area, as well as lower cost and higher reliability. Both keyboard and casework have been minimised: the A600 keyboard retains only the main QWERTY section and cursor, help and delete keys; and a built-in 3.5" 880K floppy drive uses a new low profile drive mechanism.

The 512K A600 uses a single 256K x 16 (4 Megabit, 512K) DRAM. The 1MB version of the A600 uses two of these chips.

Due to the limited expansion and new DRAM technology used on the A600, it has been possible to reduce the power supply to 3.5A on +5v, 0.5A on +12v and 0.1A on -12v.

Some new connectors have been added to the A600. To support the consumer orientation of the A600, colour composite video and an RF modulator have been included in the base system.

A major feature of the new Amiga is its support for credit card memory I/O cards which are compliant with the popular PCMCIA/JEIDA 68-pin standard for memory card devices. The 68-pin connector is intended mainly for ROM cards, SRAM cards and Flash ROM cards. Game programmers and other application programmers can design applications which run from PCMCIA standard ROM cards which can be mastered and produced by a number of firms.

The credit card interface has a main memory area and a second area for Attribute, Peripheral and Status registers. Straightforward interfaces between the cards of various manufacturers will mean that for the Amiga, there will be Amiga-specific cards and also industry cards.

The A600 allows up to a total of 2MB of chip RAM and a battery backed RTC (real-time clock) through a small add-in card, the A601.

The new model also has internal capability for an internal 2.5" hard drive using the popular 16-bit programmed I/O interface which is becoming common in the PC world, and IDE (Integrated Drive Electronics) interface has been added, this is compatible with a variety of small 2.5" lower power hard drives for a range of laptop computers.

A new generation of GARY (system interface and glue) chip, known as GAYLE, makes the new A600 capabilities possible. GAYLE still performs basic functions such as chip selects and miscellaneous control signals, but now also includes a complete hardware implementation for the PCMCIA/JEIDA for the Amiga and includes a series of special purpose registers for this interface.

Between the A600 and A601, the new Amiga will have a total of 2MB chip RAM. An additional 4MB of system memory can be provided via the PCMCIA card interface.
